New York City

Dear Joe:

I am writing to enclose this check, which I do not consider payment for the service you have rendered, but a little token. You know of course the day was not a financial success, but I was not dissappointed. I never expected to overcome the Sunday competition.

I still believe Brooklyn should be a good baseball town for our baseball, and may try again. Right now I am a little tired. There is so little cooperation from any source, most everyone in the baseball seems to carry the feeling of the ball game (competition) into the business. I guess everyone thinks his problem is the biggest, and humans are never satisfied. I have found that things do have a way of working out.

I will make it my business to come to New York soon, one of the main reasons to talk to you. I will call you before coming.

I am sincerely sorry of the sorrow you have just had, but that is something we all have to expect and accept. I am sure he is happier.

Very Truly Yours
